The development of a close, collaborative relationship allows teachers and parents to work together to support a child at school and at home. Strong communication also enables parents to support classroom learning at home by reinforcing topics and skills. This workshop will address the value of building an alliance between parents, caregivers, educators and children. Participants will leave with strategies for initiating effective peer-to-peer conversations between parents and teachers.

About The Children Who Learn Differently Parent Education Series

This workshop is part of a series on helping parents equip their children with the “survival skills” to become better students. The workshops in this series can help nurture a partnership between parents and teachers to support success in school and at home. When you register, we give you the option of including your child’s teacher’s contact information. If you would like, we will send a letter to the teacher advising him/her of your attendance and offering him/her the option of attending at no charge. Parents are welcome to attend one or more sessions.
